

A Month of Photography takes root in the city

You might have noticed a slew of photographs dominating the walls of your favourite eateries, establishments and galleries in Mississauga over the last few days.

Breaking out was easy

Prison Break returns for another exciting season where the escaped convicts learn that breaking out of prison was the easy part.

The show airs tonight on Global TV at 9 p.m.

- Are you ready for some football? The Washington Redskins and Philadelphia Eagles kick off at 8:30 p.m. on TSN.

The works are being hung as part of the ongoing A Month of Photography festival, now in its third year. The exhibition happens at various locations across Mississauga and Brampton, including restaurants, businesses and established galleries such as the Art Gallery of Mississauga and The Village Gallery.

The festival aims to expand the understanding and appreciation of photography as an artistic medium while developing and promoting artists, according to co-ordinator Fausta Facciponte. It runs until the end of September.

At the Enfield Fox, six photographers are showing their works at the Snap Shot part of the exhibition. They include Nikki Wesley, Heidi Evans, Andrew Povilaitis, Dan Guerin, Claudette Mainzer and Nathan Hakeem.

Wesley, a staff photographer with The Mississauga News, said she was thrilled to be participating in her first exhibition.

"It's exciting, but nerve-wracking," laughed Wesley. "Most of the work (on display) has been unofficially dubbed as 'do you see how I see?'"

On Saturday, Sept. 29, the Camera Works aspect of the festival opens with a reception at the Living Arts Centre's Laidlaw Hall Gallery. The opening runs from 1-3 p.m.

The exhibit will feature an eclectic mix of styles and techniques by both established and emerging artists and includes traditional and modern works as well as documentary and other practices.

For the complete festival catalogue, visit www.amonthofphotography.org.

The Mississauga News staff photographer Nikki Wesley is showing works at the Enfield Fox as part of the ongoing A Month of Photography exhibit.